In a future where the vast expanse of the solar system is a battleground, Aiden, a brilliant inventor, and Silvia, a determined scientist, find themselves at the forefront of a technological revolution as they hold the key to shaping humanity's destiny.

With his groundbreaking antimatter energy system on the verge of completion, Aiden turns to his ex-girlfriend, Silvia for help revolutionizing interstellar travel. But as the device's true potential is realized and the power it can bring becomes known, they become ensnared in a deadly game of power and greed.

The Autocratic Empire, fueled by sinister ambitions, seeks to harness Aiden's invention to conquer the solar system. Meanwhile, the United Space Alliance, driven by corporate interests, sees the technology as a means to dominate beyond the stars.

As government agents close in and their lives hang in the balance, a mysterious entity named Aurora emerges, offering hope amidst the chaos. Yet, as Aiden and Silvia grapple with the consequences of their creation falling into the wrong hands, they must confront their doubts about Aurora's true motives.

Caught between two ruthless factions, a terrorist organization, and a mysterious god-like being, Aiden and Silvia must navigate a treacherous landscape of betrayal, deceit, and the unknown if they are to save humanity from extinction.

EXCERPT FROM FATHERS CAN BE TOUGH

Aiden could not stand the tension. He felt he had to say something, hopefully nothing stupid. He started out hesitating, not appearing confident.

“So... how are you, Dad? It looks busy as ever.”

Thompson grinned a bit. “You know me, always busy. How are you doing, son?”

Before Aiden could answer, Thompson took his hands off Aiden’s shoulders and headed towards his bar behind the couch. “I would ask how is school doing, but I know you’ve pretty much finished that and moved on to other things.”

Aiden felt angry and frustrated. His father’s back was now turned away from him. Aiden’s brow squeezed together as his eyes became more focused and a grin spread across his face.

“Yes, I have, but you already know what I am doing, don’t you?”

His dad turned around. Thompson let out a big sigh. “Yes, I do know, which is why I asked you to come here. Is it true?” Aiden was not sure what he was asking, but he had a good idea. He tried to play ignorant as he pretended to look confused.

Aiden’s tone rose with his question. “Is what true?”

Thompson was losing a bit of his patience. His voice now a bit louder. “Is it true you are working on an energy system that uses antimatter?”

Aiden wondered why he was asking him. His father was well-informed enough to already know the answer. He had many ways of finding out what his competitors were doing. “Specifically, is what true? That sounds like the same question.”

EXCERPT CONTINUED

Thompson pointed and yelled, “Sit down, Aiden!” He went over to get some water for Aiden and a drink for himself, his demeanor and voice calming down. He sounded almost happy now.

“This is a new type of specially engineered beer—all the taste of a beer with all the feeling of getting drunk without the bad hangover and side-effects. Do you want one?”
